Colonel Roosevelt at Louisville.

The Kentuckians, whom Colonel ROOSEVELT addressed at Louisville last night, are a people sensitive about their honor and quick to resent wrong and insult, none more so; and the Colonel's exposure of the cant and cowardice of Mr. Wilson's foreign policy must have put all the corpuscles of their blood "into shouting shape," to quote Woodbow Wilson in a moment of rhetorical valor calculated for an occasion.

In the sharpness of its analysis, in Its spirit of traditional Americanism. robust yet restrained, and in the virillty of its appeal, the speech delivered at Louisville was perhaps Colonel Roosevert's best contribution to the campaign.

The Louisville speech lends itself refrain is impossible. Of the Mexican policy Colonel Roosevert said that "Mr. Willson does not mind the long as we are not at war with the vided that; Mexicans." There has been no keener characterization of "watchful waiting." The Colonel must have had Carrizal in mind when he declared that "Mr. Wilson's conception of war painfully resembles that described by Mr. STEPHEN LEACOCK in his anecdote of how Mr. Smith took Mr. Tompkins by the cont collar from behind and began kicking him vigorously, 'and the fight continued in this manner for several minutes." Again, with Havti in his thoughts, the Colonel observed that Mr. Witson "has taught the world that no nation which is small enough to be helpless can in-

The fear of a rear attack from Greece or of Greelan secret conni vance with their enemy has no doubt been one of the reasons of the slow progress of the Allies' army in Macedonla.
